Dear Lady Jackville,

It is most good of you to let me know about Vita. I have been wondering all these days whether she had arrived safely, & it is a great relief to have your news. Now I feel we may begin to think of her coming back. It must have been a great strain for you; but now I feel the worst of the journey is over.

Vita told me she was sending me the photograph she had taken for her passport. This has never come. I wonder if you would have the great kindness to send me a card with the photographer's name, that I may write to him myself? But not, of course, if it is the least trouble to you.

It is very good of you to say that I may come & see you. I should so much like to, if I am in Brighton.

Thank you again for thinking of writing to me.

Yours sincerely

Virginia Woolf
